

Maine's Most Endangered Historic Properties—2006

A program of Maine Preservation

The Stockholm Mountain Fire Lookout Tower, built in 1920, doubled as a World War II lookout for enemy planes potentially infiltrating U.S. airspace from the north and east.

This steel and wood structure has remained a beloved local landmark for over 65 years. The Maine Forest Service deeded the structure to the Town in the mid 1970s, and since that time the citizens of Stockholm have endeavored to keep their local landmark maintained and preserved for future generations. They intend to incorporate the tower into a public walking area, and interpret the history of the tower.

Maine Preservation's Board of Trustees acted on the Town's nomination for Most Endangered status in order to help them raise awareness and funds to protect and preserve the Stockholm Mountain Lookout Tower for future generations.
