OPEGA Releases Positive Review of the Maine Historic Rehabilitation Tax Credit

November 10, 2021 | Augusta, ME – The Office of Program Evaluation and Government Accountability released its evaluation of the Maine Historic Rehabilitation Tax Credit (HRTC), finding that the tax credit’s structure and administration are sound and efficient, the credit follows best practices, and program data is robust. The evaluation also found that the HRTC incentivizes historic preservation and community revitalization, promoting affordable housing, job creation, and economic growth.

Historic preservation advocates, whose 2020 report on the economic impacts of Maine Historic Tax Credits was instrumental in the review, applauded OPEGA’s in-depth research and recommendations.

“Maine’s historic properties, including former mills, factories, schools and residences, are an integral part of our main streets and rural landscapes,” said Daniel Wallace, Senior Vice President, Lending and Investment at CEI. “At CEI, we know how challenging it is to secure the resources needed to bring these iconic properties back into use. We also know how catalytic historic redevelopment can be for community revitalization. CEI welcomes the MHRTC tax expenditure review report, which confirms the importance that historic tax credits will continue to play a vital role in bringing buildings into the 21st century for use by small business owners, and young and older people needing affordable and workforce housing.”

“GrowSmart Maine knows that Maine’s tax credit for rehabilitation of historic structures is a sound investment in community revitalization through its proven impact in drawing growth and redevelopment investments to downtowns of all sizes across Maine,” said Nancy Smith, Executive Director at GrowSmart Maine.

“We are so pleased that the evaluation noted the strong economic impact of the credit while also noting the credit’s less quantifiable role in preserving Maine’s unique quality of place,” said Sarah Hansen, Executive Director of Greater Portland Landmarks. “Additionally, the evaluation noted that the historic tax credit compliments many goals of the Maine Climate Council, as the rehabilitation and weatherization of existing structures leverages embodied energy, keeping durable materials in place rather than in landfills, driving investment in jobs rather than materials.”

“The report highlighted an underused segment of the successful program, the ability for smaller scale projects and their owners to take advantage of the set-aside for projects spending less than $250,000 on renovations. This limit precludes the difficult task of finding federal Historic Tax Credit investors for such small deals and allows the Maine Historic Preservation Commission to approve the deal without the delay, expense, and complexity of a full National Park Service submission,” said John Egan, Chief Lending & Program Officer at The Genesis Fund. “The set-aside for smaller projects can truly be transformative in Maine’s many rural downtowns with abundant but underused second floor spaces along main street.”

“MEREDA applauds the Office of Program Evaluation and Government Accountability (OPEGA) and the Government Oversight Committee for their work on the MHRTC tax expenditure review report,” said Josh Fifield, President of the Maine Real Estate and Development Association. “MEREDA would welcome the elimination of the sunset date, establishing a permanent program that will provide predictability for developers to continue to put historic rehabilitation projects in the pipeline for years to come.”

“The OPEGA evaluation notes the limitations of the credit to income-producing properties, leaving Maine’s historic homeowners without the opportunity to benefit from this valuable resource,” said Tara Kelly, Executive Director of Maine Preservation. “We hope that the legislature will not only extend the sunset of the existing credit, but expand this opportunity to more Mainers.”
